When Diocletian determined to reside himself in the East, he chose Nicomedia, and Nicomedia corresponds to the tentative establishments of Saffah and Mansur on the Euphrates. When Constantine decided that Nicomedia would not suit the requirements of a new Rome, he was no less at a loss than Mansur, and we are told that various sites competed for his choice before he discovered Byzantium. But the tasks which confronted the two founders were widely different. Constantine had to renew and extend an ancient city; and his plans were conditioned by the hilly Le Stuaenge, the lagoons which marked its stream were - In the last portion of its course it navigable (ib.). entirely the great swamp, but the nature of the ground. The architectural inventiveness of Mansur and his engineers was hampered by no pre-existing town; when they had cleared away a...

This kind of publication is every little thing and taught me to look ahead of time and a lot more. It is packed with wisdom and knowledge. Once you begin to read the book, it is extremely difficult to leave it before concluding.
